Product Category Pages (aka Model Grids)

Product Price Comparison (aka Model Pages)

Toshiba
32CV505DB

G-Rating ★★★★★

You won't find too many big-brand 32-inch LCD TVs ducking under the £500 mark, but Toshiba's entry-level screen is as easy on the wallet as it is on the eye. Sure, it's not full 1080p, but that's not a big deal on a smallish screen like this, and the plus points are many: strong black levels, impressive colour depth, decent amounts of detail with HD content. The audio performance isn't particularly noteworthy, but this can be overlooked given the TV's strength in other areas.

An amazing four HDMI inputs means you'll have no trouble connecting all your hi-def gear to this 42-inch screen, which also sports a full 1920 x 1080 resolution, dual AmbientLight backlighting and Philips Pixel Plus 3 HD picture enhancement technology. The picture is crisply detailed with smooth, seamless colour transitions and judder-free motion and sound is much bigger and beefier than we've come to expect from a flat screen TV.

JVC LT-42DS9

JVC joins the size zero trend and slims down to nothing

With the LT-42DS9 JVC has pulled out the scissors and snipped this television in two ways: while the 74mm-deep tuner model means it's not as ironing board-flat as other TVs, at parts it's 34mm deep, and thanks to its slim frame it's also brilliantly narrow.

We reckon it's the most compact 42-inch TV on the market. Thankfully it's no lightweight when it comes to performance and specs: the screen is a full 1080p jobbie that excels with HD content and games, delivering natural colours and sharp detail, while the sound is chunky and bass-heavy and there are inputs aplenty, including three HDMI's.

The Panasonic Lumix range has impressed for several years now, with its wide field-of-view, and it is safe to say that the brand has moved into the market leader slot with ease. The TZ range has always received acclaim and the 10.1-megapixel Panasonic Lumix DMC-TZ7 is the latest incarnation, taking that ultra-wide message one stage further.

I've personally never found Google Product search all that useful, but hopefully that will change now. Google Operating System reports that Google Product Search has undergone a redesign of some sort.

In the past, Google Product Search just showed you results but did not group stores offering to sell the same product with reviews and technical specifications. Now, for some searches, Google groups store results, shows reviews on Google, and also shows product specifications.

For example, a search on iphone shows many results, but now there is a button to "Compare Prices."

When you click on the result, you are taken to a page that shows the prices by the stores Google grouped together, with store reviews:

★★★★☆ Toshiba H30, 28 Jun 2010

By Jimbo

This review is from: Toshiba Camileo H30 Camcorder - UK version (Electronics)

Having done quite a bit of research on camcorders and being quite a gadget junkie I am embarrassed to say that I got this purchase all wrong. It is a very poor piece of kit from a reputable company. As other reviewers have said it is not at the top end price bracket, nonetheless you expect more for your money. The buttons are flimsy, the fact it goes back to default every time you switch it off is an unbelievably bad piece of design. Most importantly however is the picture quality which is poor. Colours are washed out to the extreme - even in good light. In dim conditions it simply cannot handle it - the picture is very grainy and disappointing. I bought my camera for 180 and was happy to sell it on for 100 quid a couple of months later just to get shut of it.

I will be spending a little more next time - lesson learnt!

And as to the Purported Irregularities...

"Issues with Foundem's website included the fact that Foundem offered little or no original content on its site (e.g., product reviews), repeated the same data feed product description numerous times, was rife with irregularities (e.g., garbled or missing text), had minimal editorial care, and low added value."

Paragraph 50.6 of Google's Defence

As demonstrated in our October 16 2009 note to Matt Cutts following our conference call, Google's CSS had all of the same "irregularities (e.g., garbled or missing text" as Foundem (and every other CSS had).

Conclusion

Foundem has now addressed all of the issues raised.

We have also provided examples demonstrating that all of the issues raised are commonplace among all leading price comparison services. It is especially noteworthy that Google's own Product Search service contains examples of every issue that Google has raised in relation to Foundem.

Google says that it needs to ensure that Foundem is "meeting the same guidelines that all sites have to meet". It seems that Foundem has, in fact, been asked to exceed this standard by some considerable margin.

We hope that Google will now expedite whatever adjustments are necessary to allow Foundem to once again rank normally on a level playing field with its competitors.

“Quality Issues” – Google Product Search

The screenshot shows a Google Product Search page for 'ipod classic'. The search results list several Apple iPod classic models. Each listing includes a product title, price, and a 'Compare prices' button. A red box highlights a repetitive phrase in the description of each item: 'Decisions, decisions. Who needs 'em? Why should you have to choose what to put on your iPod? With large storage capacity, iPod classic lets you carry everything in your ...'. This text is identical across all listings, suggesting a quality issue or a placeholder error in the search results.

None of this is surprising. Because, as we also explained at the time, these textual “irregularities” nearly always originate in the product feeds or websites of the merchants that these CSSs are merely faithfully reproducing.

Google's Cell Phone Example

- In the months and years following our EC Competition Complaint, a Google contingent travelled the world to try and persuade regulators, lawmakers, and journalists that our allegations were unfounded.
- As part of this, Google would show various misleading slides that, among other things, set out to portray Foundem's service as "bad", "duplicative" and "valueless".
- The following Google slides were sent to us by a friendly source in March 2011.

From a Google Presentation to Regulators, Journalists etc. Circa March 2011:

Downgrading Bad Sites

- Many of Google's critics complain about their ads not showing, or their sites not placing highly, when Google determines through its algorithms that the site is poor quality, and of little value to consumers
- These include:
 - TradeComet, a site that made its money by forcing consumers to click on more ads rather than displaying original content
 - Foundem, a shopping site that displays paid-for product placement, and whose results are duplicative and valueless
 - myTriggers, a shopping site that was simply copying its results from other shopping comparison sites

The screenshot shows the Foundem website interface. At the top, it says 'The UK's "Top" Price Comparison Site The Gadget Show, December 2008'. Below that is a search bar and navigation links. The main content area is titled 'Compare Prices for the Samsung Tocco Lite Mobile Phone'. It features a list of search results for the Samsung Tocco Lite, with filters on the left for Price (£0 to £240), Colour, Network, Inclusive Texts, Inclusive Minutes, Contract, Web, MP3 Player, Bluetooth, Radio, Digital Camera, and Shop. Each search result includes a product image, a brief description, and a 'FREE Delivery' badge. The 'Shop' section lists various retailers like Amazon.co.uk, Carphone Warehouse, Currys, Dixons, Freemans, Littlewoods, Maplin, Electronics, O2, Orange, Phones4u, T-Mobile, Tesco Direct, Very, and Woolworths.

Foundem's Technology

Foundem's case is not just about a legitimate business that was unlawfully foreclosed.

It is an example of considerable innovation that has been suppressed and lost as a direct result of Google's conduct.

An Overview of Foundem's Technology

- In contrast to most vertical search services, which tend to rely on bespoke technological solutions that are highly tailored to the particular vertical or related verticals that they serve, Foundem is built on a proprietary, configurable vertical-search platform that can be readily tailored to serve almost any vertical.
- Foundem's technology can be divided into two distinct components: (i) its patented vertical search platform (Websentient); and (ii) its automated product classification technology.

1. Foundem's WebSentient™ Architecture

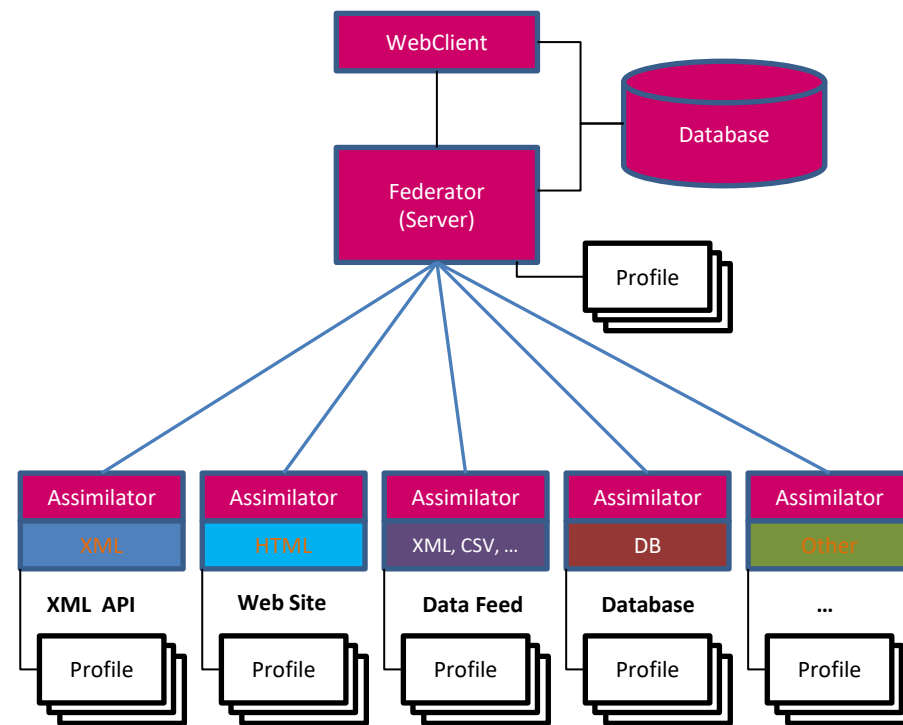

- At its core, Foundem's vertical search platform is based on two abstractions:
 - a) The first recognises the similarities in all parameterised searches.

Whatever kind of item is being searched for, a parameterised search is essentially a matter of defining the contextual parameters required to search for such items (e.g. price-range, minimum number of bedrooms, departure date, brand, and so on), defining how those parameters should be applied to the attributes of the items being searched for (e.g., price, number of bedrooms, departure date and time, brand), and finally defining how to display, filter, and sort any items that meet those search parameters.
 - b) The second recognises the similarities in the various underlying technologies behind all structured data sources.

Databases, APIs, datafeeds, and even websites, are all variations of structured data sources which – provided one understands their structure – can be queried in a way that retrieves structured contextual results.
- Foundem's vertical search platform is essentially an embodiment of these two abstractions, where all layers and components are designed to perform generic parameterised contextual searches, with most of the tailoring to a specific vertical is confined to a configuration file, called a Profile...

1. Foundem's WebSentient™ Architecture

- Programmable, profile-driven vertical search technology.
- Enables parameterised queries for virtually anything (e.g., products, flights, hotel rooms, jobs).
- Supports compound types for the things being search for (e.g. a flight, a house, a television)
- Can search or aggregate data in virtually any format (e.g. product feeds, APIs, websites, spreadsheets, and databases)
- Each search vertical can be configured to run off aggregated data (e.g. price comparison), live data (e.g. flight search), or a mixture of both (e.g. book search).
- Any feature developed for one search vertical (e.g., price sliders, attribute filters, geocoding, auto-complete lookups, etc.) can be immediately brought to bear in any other search vertical.
- Additional domains (verticals) can be added with very low incremental costs.
- Economies of scale mean that niche verticals, which could not support a vertical search business in their own right, become practical.
- Highly scalable architecture.
- Multi-Language, multi-currency (with auto conversion).

Foundem tended to beat other CSSs on the key metrics of best price and most offers, not because it featured more merchants, but because of the unique ability of its product classification technology to identify and accurately "group" each particular product regardless of the many disparate ways in which different (or even the same) merchants refer to the same make and model.

	FIRST IMPRESSIONS	CHEAPEST RETURN EDINBURGH-PALMA, MALLORCA*	CHEAPEST RETURN LONDON-NEW YORK CITY*	WHAT'S GOOD?	WHAT'S BAD?	SPECIAL FEATURES	WHICH? HOLIDAY VERDICT	SCORE
	Busy homepage with three link choices through to the same flight search page	Flyglobespan £150*	Expedia (Continental Airlines) £338 BEST AVAILABLE FARE	Excellent search-narrowing options such as direct flights only and flexibility on dates. Results arrived quite speedily, clearly laid out with carrier icons and detailed flight info	We weren't able to click on its 'Show alternative dates' or 'airports' filter on the results page. Ryanair was not included in the Palma results	The site remembers the search entries from your previous visit	A great all-rounder, with handy search tools, and up-to-date, targeted and cheap results. Also offers guidance on other travel topics such as insurance and airport parking	84%
	The homepage is easy to negotiate, click through to useful FAQs and search tips	Out Easyjet, return Ryanair - £153, but Ryanair's fare had risen, so the real time total was £166	Ebookers (Delta Airlines) £351	Superb search choices, a 'Who flies here?' list, a high number of fast results, with split airlines meaning cheaper total prices. It rectifies misspellings of destinations well	Where prices are displayed with results, you then have to choose departure and return flights separately. More details about the flight would be good	Lots, eg choose options from a route map, and add flight details to your email calendar	The sheer number of creative search options may be overwhelming for some visitors, but a great, flexible site if you don't mind where you fly to and just want a cheap deal	76%
	From the homepage, one click to the simple, very neat flight search page	Ebookers (Easyjet) £195, but unavailable when linking through	Expedia (Continental Airlines) £338 BEST AVAILABLE FARE	You can order results by airline or departure time. An extensive filtering tool allows editing out of certain online agencies or airlines	Limited search options leading to many irrelevant results. Links didn't always lead to the same fare as originally shown	You can store results by clicking on 'Compare'	This 'search engine' covers a multitude of non travel-related products too. Its flight search is easy to use but it lacks the travel features of other sites	64%
	Cheery homepage packed with many well-defined sections, although too many adverts for deals	Terminal A (Easyjet) £191, but when going direct on Terminal A's site, Ryanair was cheapest (£148)	Opodo (Delta Airlines) £347, but 'unavailable' when linking through to Opodo*	Search results came quickly and clearly - plenty of ways to filter these down. If you misspell a destination, it cleverly works out what you meant	Some small regional airports don't appear on the UK airports dropdown list. No warning that the prices shown may not be the final fare	Map-based travel guide	Search results don't always show all airlines on each route. The site also offers much practical, consumer travel information such as hotel reviews and a link to a list of blacklisted airlines	62%
	Typical US homepage design. Quite cluttered with 'deals' but also a clear flight search box	Easyjet £179	Ebookers (Delta Airlines) £350 (£351 when linking through)	Fares from 500 or so airlines are automatically updated often so should be correct and available. On your return to the site, it remembers your original flight search choices	Pages were slow to load. Search results give little flight info and no mention of possible changes to final flight prices	A fare calendar helps you choose the cheapest dates to fly	The site focuses on deals - good that you can choose these by country or airport. The Mess That Is Google Shopping

One of the things Google promised by moving Google Shopping to the pay-to-play model for merchants was how much the experience was going to improve for shoppers. If that's the case, I'm sure not seeing it. Come on a little tour.

Amazon Don't Play That Game

The new system began on October 17. Perhaps the most striking change by Google deciding that it would only list merchants if they pay to be included is the absence of a little known online retailer called Amazon. Nope, Amazon doesn't want to play Google's game, where it only gets included if it pays.

This type of absence is exactly why Google argued against the "paid inclusion" model for Google Shopping (or any type of search engine) back in 2004, saying:

Most online merchants are also automatically included in Froogle's [now Google Shopping] index of shopping sites. Because we do not charge merchants for inclusion in Froogle, our users can browse product categories or conduct product searches with confidence that the results we provide are relevant and unbiased.

Selecting "Kindle Fire HD" gives me this:

The arrows show how the Kindle Fire HD's 7" model is listed four different ways. Yes, one of the listings is for the 32GB model, and you could argue it should be separated from the base 16GB model. But that still leaves three separate product listings where one should be enough.

More Oddness With The Kindle Fire HD Product Page

You might have noticed that on the Kindle Fire HD page, there was a note at the top saying it was "#5 in E-Book Readers." Clicking on that link takes you to the E-Book Reader page at Google Shopping:

As you can see, the Kindle Fire HD is indeed rated fifth, er, make that fourth. Well, what's a little accuracy with the ratings when so much else isn't accurate.

See that second arrow, telling you the number of stores it's offered at, more than 25? That means more than 25 online stores (next to it is a separate count for "nearby stores").

More than 25 online stores? No, as arrow #2 highlights, there are only four. Perhaps Google is counting nearby stores, as well? As arrow #3 highlights, there are 134 of those. But remember what I said earlier, Google listed these stores separately in its counts.

And Here is a Contemporaneous Critique of Google's CSS from November 2012

You, Sir, Are No Kindle Fire HD

If I'm disappointed that I only got four online stores rather than more than 25, at least for some strange reason, navigating directly to the Kindle Fire HD product page produced an additional store that was not shown when I got to it by searching.

That's what arrow #2 highlights, a listing from All4Cellular, promising the Kindle Fire HD for the low, low price of $150. Let's click to learn more about this bargain:

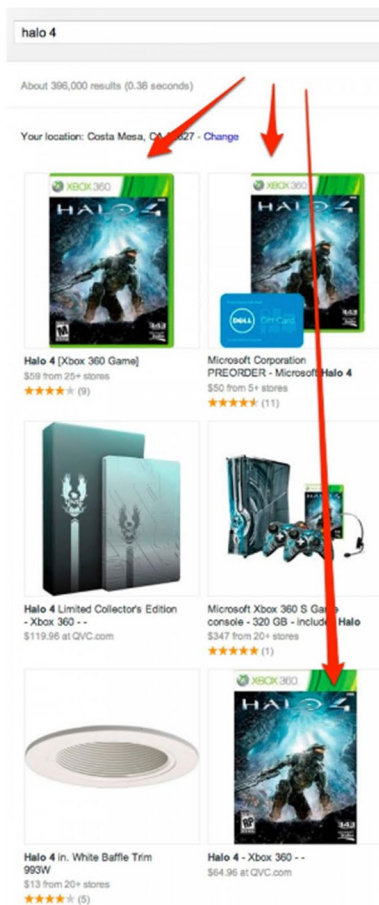

That's not the Kindle Fire HD. That's the original Kindle Fire. But despite Google's new pay-to-be-listed system that's supposed to improve search quality, the old Kindle Fire makes it into the Kindle Fire HD page.

Hey, it's better than yesterday when for whatever reason, 25 separate eBay listings for the Kindle Fire were being clustered into one of the Google Shopping pages. I can't find that today. Maybe eBay has pulled its listings suddenly. But, there's still plenty of mess left over.

And Here is a Contemporaneous Critique of Google's CSS from November 2012

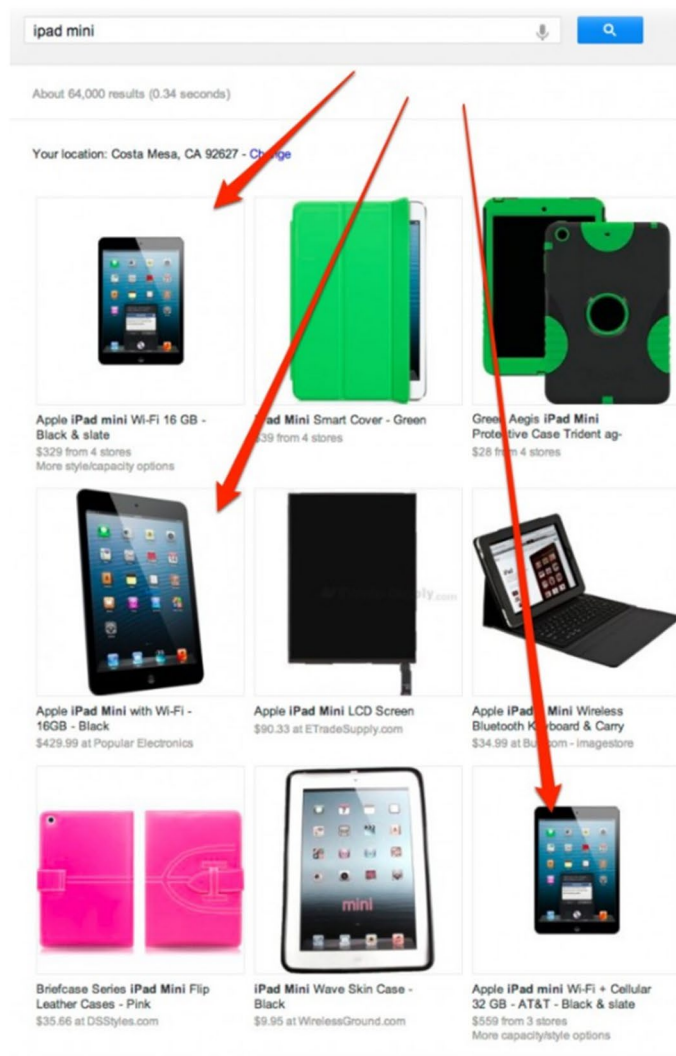

Beyond The Kindle

Leaving Amazon behind, how about Halo 4? Same product, listed three different ways:

The good news is that the first listing leads to a very nice Halo 4 page with plenty of merchants listed. The preorder listing in the screenshot above arguably shouldn't get lumped into that. But the third Halo listing from QVC? This type of stuff should get caught.

And Here is a Contemporaneous Critique of Google's CSS from November 2012

Again, we get the first listing which leads to a page about the product, but there's a second "Popular Electronics" listing that doesn't get clustered into that. Then there's the third listing that, while it's for a larger capacity model, still should have gotten clustered into the first listing. After all, that first listing has a description that promises there are "more style/capacity options" available.

Here's the kicker.... Products in Google shopping, with little competition, are being sold at nearly twice the going rate as what is found on Amazon. The consumer is getting hosed when using Google shopping. Definitely stay away from Google shopping this holiday season unless you like paying twice as much as you have to for gifts.

Shopping is an absolute disjointed mess! Especially w/ the un-verified rating display system.

Unfortunately this is nothing new. In my experience Google Shopping has always been this bad, which was fine when it was free, but to now charge for it without any sort of improvement in the listings / shopping search results really grates.
